The transport and distribution of charged particles in electrolyte solutions are crucial for many physical and biological processes. In this talk, we will go over the conventional models of these problems. We will then employ an energetic variational approach in deriving the governing systems for the general diffusion in non-ideal solutions.